FINDING THE LIBRARY WEBPAGE

Using a college library may be a little different than finding material in your high school library. A college or university library is usually larger and has access to many more materials than your typical high school library. Just remember that if you have questions, we are here to help you. One goal for our session today is to help you become familiar with using a college library. We will be discussing how to navigate the library webpage as well as showing you around the library building itself.

You will need to get to the library webpage to access the resources that we will be discussing today. Simply click on the Internet Explorer icon, and type in this address: library.ehc.edu. This URL address will take you straight to the library homepage.

FINDING MATERIAL IN THE ONLINE CATALOG

The online catalog (also sometimes called HAL or the opac), contains the holdings of its four members' libraries. It's easy to use; see the examples below.

The first screenshot shows a keyword search, and the second screen shows a record for an item in the library's collection and includes basic bibliographic (identification) information. An alternative way to search is subject searching. Subject searching uses a controlled vocabulary of words and phrases; sometimes it is hard to figure out what they are (that's why librarians are here to help). If one way doesn't work, try the other, and if you are not finding relevant material, please ask a librarian for assistance.

FINDING MATERIAL IN ONLINE DATABASES

Kelly Library subscribes to many online databases. For this class, we will work primarily with one journal database called Academic Search Complete. Academic Search Complete contains a mixture of popular and scholarly periodical articles and is mainly full-text. It is a good place to begin looking for articles. Below is an example from Academic Search Complete.

Abstract: Recent news in the national media about two students' deaths as a result of harassment in school has highlighted a renewed desire for educators to address the culture of bullying and harassment in public schools, especially when the victims are targeted for their real or perceived differences. South Carolina's legislature responded to this need in June 2006 with the passage of the Safe School Climate Act. This statute was designed to limit and punish "harassment, intimidation, or bullying" among public school students, and it required school districts to establish policies to address this issue before January 1, 2007. However, failure to adequately implement the provision may provide an explanation as to why the Safe School Climate Act has failed to significantly change the culture of schools in South Carolina. South Carolina's legislative intentions provide a reference for similar legislation and policy changes nationwide. Current research shows that only quality staff development combined with
